The story behind Millers Row.

In 1863, early settler Moses Thomas constructed a steam-operated flour mill and neighbouring bluestone cottage on the western bank of the Plenty River, in what is now Plenty Gorge Park. It was the last of three flour mills to be built on the banks of the Plenty, and the largest.

South Morang has changed a lot in 150 years. The mills have long gone, and the area is now home to a vibrant, modern and diverse community, surrounded by the beauty of the natural environment.

Peet understands the importance of history and heritage and has named Millers Row in acknowledgement of the contribution Moses Thomas and the other millers made to the area. Peet itself was founded in 1895, just 30 years after Moses Thomas built his flour mill, and has grown to become one of Australia's leading residential developers. That's experience you can trust.
